USER MANUAL

Clip Point: Ideal for precision-type tasks because of its fine sharp point. The clip point style blade is one of the most standard shapes found in knives, identified by a spine with a front section that appears to be clipped off.

Drop Point: Great for general-purpose use and ideal for hunters. They are identified by the convex spine that curves down from the handle to the point. This creates an easily-controlled point and a larger area for slicing.

Spear Point: This blade has a symmetrical shape and a point that falls in-line with the center of the knife itself, producing a strong build. Spear point knives are commonly used in daggers and throwing knives.

Straight Back: Ideal for chopping and slicing. This blade is identified by its unsharpened straight back spine and an edge that curves up to meet at the tip.

Maizé: Commonly used for farming, this blade is identified by its short rounded edges. This blade style is very traditional, but over time its style has evolved, making it useful for multiple purposes.

Tanto: This style blade is inspired by the short swords worn by Samurai in Japan. Since that era, the blade has evolved to become more resourceful. A curved chape shape now identifies this blade with an angular edge transition that makes for a much stronger and prominent point.
